Submission of original essays, research, and critical reviews are encouraged on all topics related to the study of contemporary families. Submissions can address a variety of family topics that are connected to (re)conceptualizing/(re)defining “family,” including but not limited to marriage patterns, reproductive patterns, blended families, chosen families, cohabitation, mixed racial/ethnic partnerships, dual earner households, working mothers, breadwinner mothers/caregiving fathers, adoptive and foster families, and LGBTQIA families. We encourage research that takes into consideration the wide variety of contemporary contexts that directly impact the definitions of family, the rights of parents or partners, the wellbeing of children or the elderly, everyday communication with families, family identity, family structure, and the everyday dynamics or realities of family life. We especially encourage submissions from students and junior faculty. Submit manuscripts electronically by October 15, 2016, to Jennifer Haskin at jhaskin5@asu.edu. Please include “Michigan Family Review, Volume 21” in the subject line.
