About the Authors

Hyun Kyong Hannah Chang is currently a lecturer at University of California, Los Angeles. Her research centers on East Asian modernism and Cold War musical cultures in the Pacific Rim, with an emphasis on Korea and the Korean diaspora. She is working on a book project that explores the intersection of American religious mission, choral music, and Cold War politics in post-1945 Korea based on her dissertation, which she completed in 2014 with the support of an AMS 50 Fellowship.

Christopher Crenshaw is a graduate student in history at Florida State University. His research interests include youth and generational conflict in American history, popular culture, and the intersection of science and the humanities.

Ellis Jones is about to begin a PhD at the University of Leeds under the supervision of Dr David Hesmondhalgh and Dr Leslie Meier, on the political status of amateur musicians in the present day. Ellis' research interests include DIY music culture, popular music criticism, and music and sports.

Jedrek Mularski is a Professor of History at Saddleback College in Mission Viejo, California. He completed his Ph.D. in Latin American History at the University of California, San Diego in 2012, and his scholarship focuses on the relationship between music, politics, and identity during the Cold War era in Chile.

Robert Neustadt is Professor of Spanish and Director of Latin American Studies at Northern Arizona University where he conducts research on music and politics in Latin America. He co-produced, and performs a song on Border Songs, a 31-track double album, that features music and spoken word in English and Spanish about the border and immigration. All proceeds go to No More Deaths (No Más Muertes), a group that provides humanitarian aid to migrants and recently deported people.
